
The Exposition Dedicated to the Siege of Leningrad

Kuralenya Victoria, 10th grader

Would you like to know what happened at our school on January 25th? This is an event for which our school has been preparing for a long time, so that we could experience this time of life for ourselves and learn something new.

We all know that the siege of Leningrad was lifted on January 27. And in honor of this significant moment, the students of our school decided to arrange an exhibition dedicated to this holiday and of course they invited our class. At the exhibition itself, while the presenters were talking about the moments of that time, my attention fell on the empty frame of the painting. I was wondering how so? Why did they hang an empty frame? It turned out that during the evacuation from the city, it was impossible to take a lot of cargo, so people took the paintings themselves, and left their frames in their homes. Then we went to the second part of the exposition, where we watched a video clip on the TV, which showed the day of lifting the blockade. The presenter also told about bread about its composition, how much they gave, for what and how.

Well, it's time to take stock, at this exhibition each of us learned something new for ourselves, we were able to feel that hard time for ourselves and understand how hard it was for people at that time. This exhibition conveys the strength and bravery of the people involved in this war.
